OBSERVED BEHAVIOUR

Actual behavior

When a player is disconnected with a sufficiently long kick message (approximately nine lines or more at GUI Scale 3/Auto), the message extends into the area occupied by the Back button on the multiplayer disconnection screen. As a result, the message and button overlap, making part of the message and/or the button difficult to read.

In some versions, the message is rendered behind the button; in newer versions, the message is rendered in front of it. Both rendering orders still result in the kick message and Back button overlapping instead of remaining in separate areas.

EXPECTED BEHAVIOUR

When a player is shown a multiplayer kick message, the message should remain fully readable without being obscured by the "Back" button. For long messages spanning approximately nine or more lines, the interface should position or size the message and button so they remain clearly separated, and the "Back" button should remain fully visible and usable.

ENVIRONMENT

ORIGINAL DESCRIPTION

The bug

In short, this bug is simply that the 'back' button on the multiplayer kick message screen can overlap with the kick message itself, if the message is approximately 9 lines or more. (Attached is a screenshot which shows this better).
